

To the DAG review at ICANN:

November 13, 2009

As a guiding hand in the development and oversight of the Internet, I urge the leaders at ICANN to promote the ideals of choice, competition, and freedom. These are the principles that the internet was established upon and are what has made the Internet the cornerstone of our business and personal lives.

The amount of capital and e-commerce generated by the Internet could serve to bring about an end to the global economic crisis. I ask that you always support modernization and accessibility online, and open the Internet configuration to allow for those using the Internet to realize new and improved ways for people and businesses to interact around the globe. To this end, ICANN should open the Internet to new top-level domain names and allow the Internet to evolve and grow and stop the continuous DAG revisions.

Sincerely,
