Dear Sir,

The issue of access to domain names that adequately meet expectations and suitably relate to specific business is one of frustration and agitation. The practice of domain sitters who make a business out of sale of names, particularly .com domain names is equally annoying.

Whilst the internet has and will continue to transform society, and whilst it will facilitate and develop new business practices and models, surely it was never intended that by virtue of the restriction of Top Level Domains, a business would be created that restricts and threatens the basic principles that the internet seeks to expand!

I accordingly support the "expression of interest" and trust this will move forward expeditiously!

Yours faithfully,
