

WhoisGaurd Privacy/Proxy Analysis for 4 Illicit Pharmacies

In this sample report we have selected four unlicensed pharmacies websites that use a privacy/proxy service. The four featured sites in this report all use WHOISGUARD to block the ownership of their domains. The ownership of WHOISGUARD is also a secret which creates a bit of conundrum. What we have is a secret organization shielding the identity of online drug-dealers. The four domains in question are:

Mycanadapharmacy.net - Offers illegal online consultations canadianpills.org - Offers controlled substances "without any additional hassles, requirements, or questions" rxcustomerservice.org - Is a support system site for a network of unlicensed pharmacies drugspharmacynoprescription.com - States within the name that no prescription is required

A detailed look at WhoisGuard shows it is likely owned by the Registrar NameCheap Inc. which also apparently operates as a reseller to eNom. WhoisGuard has no locatable business registration of its own and appears only to be a service or product of NameCheap. The given business address for WhoisGuard (8939 S. Sepulveda Blvd. 110 - 732 Westchester, CA 90045) is in fact a UPS store.

This obfuscation and lack of transparency goes right to the heart of the proxy/privacy problem. It is a place where criminals can act with complete secrecy because the providers are secret as well. There is little protection for or accountability to the consumer here.

Q: How does the online consultation work?

A: Online consultations are an innovation in health care that utilizes the Internet to improve patient access to the physician. Under this system, the patient no longer needs to receive a traditional physical exam by the physician, rather the patient completes an online questionnaire, and this questionnaire is then submitted to the physician using our secure order system. It must be said that online consultations can never take the place of traditional medicine, they do provide a valid means for patients to receive treatment for a number of conditions that, in many circumstances,
